ABRAHAM LINCOLN—PERSONAL INTERVIEWS AND RECOLLECTIONS.—The Independent publishes the following account by Mr. Carpenter of an interview between the President and Robert Dale Owen:

Punctual to the appointment of the hour four I Mr. Owen at the White House. A repeated summons at the bell brought no response, and he at length pushed open the door and walked leisurely up the stairs to the reception room. Neither servant nor secretary was to be seen. Presently Mr. Lincoln passed through the hall to his office, and all was still again. Looking vainly for a servant to announce his name Mr. Owen finally went to the office door and knocked.

"Really," said he, "Mr. President, I owe you an apology for coming in upon you in this unceremonious way, but I have for some time been waiting the appearance of a servant."

"Oh," was the good natured reply, "the boys are all out this morning. I have been expecting you; come in and sit down."

"I have a paper here, Mr. President, that I have prepared with some care, which I wish to relate to you."

Mr. Lincoln glanced at the formidable document (really much less voluminous than it appeared, being very coarsely written) and then, half unconsciously relapsing into an attitude and expression of resignation to what he evidently considered an infliction which could not well be avoided, signified his willingness to listen.

The article was a very carefully prepared digest of historical precedents in relation to the subject of amnesty in connection with treason and rebellion. It analyzed English and continental history and reviewed elaborately also the action of President Washington in reference to Shay's and the subsequent "whisky" rebellion.

"I had read but two or three passages," said Mr. Owen, "when Mr. Lincoln assumed an erect posture, leaning slightly forward, and, fixing his eyes intently upon me, seemed wholly absorbed in the contents of the manuscript. Frequently he would break in upon me with, 'Was that so?' 'Please read that paragraph again,' etc. When at length I came to Washington's proclamation to those engaged in the whisky rebellion he interrupted me with 'What did Washington issue a proclamation of amnesty?' 'Here it is, sir,' was the reply. 'Well, I never knew that,' he rejoined, and so on through.

"Upon the conclusion of the manuscript, Mr. Lincoln said, 'Mr. Owen, is that for me?'

"'Certainly, sir,' said Mr. O., handing him the roll. 'I understood you were considering the subject, and thought a review of this kind might be interesting to you.'

"'There is a good deal of hard work in that document,' continued Mr. Lincoln. 'May I ask how long you were preparing it?'

"'About three months, but then I have more leisure for such work than you, Mr. President.'

"Mr. Lincoln took the manuscript, and folding it up carefully, arose and laid it away in the 'pigeon hole' marked 'O,' in his desk. Returning to his chair, he said, 'Mr. Owen, it is due to you that I should say that you have conferred a very essential service, both upon me and upon the country, by the preparation of this paper. It contains that which it was exceedingly important that I should know, but which, if left to myself, I never should have known, I have not the time necessary for such an examination of authorities as a review of this kind involves. And I want to say, secondly, if I had the time, I should not have done the work so well as you have done it.'

"This frank and generous avowal—so unlike what might have been expected under similar circumstances, from most public men—was exceedingly characteristic of Mr. Lincoln."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE

WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV 29, 1865

The Northern Route

On repeated occasions we have spoken of the great advantages and [illegible] feasibility of the Northern Pacific Railroad route. The New York Tribune [illegible] commenting upon the late visit of English capitalists to the United States says

"Our Pacific Railroads are peculiarly inviting [illegible] It is the purpose of the British Government to open a path to the Pacific Ocean. They must see that their Atlantic & Great Western, rich as it is now, will become far more valuable when its freight trains are burdened with teas of China and the spices of the occidental nations. England has long desired a road to the Pacific and her engineers have time and again endeavored to find a way through British America. The favorite scheme has been to continue the Grand Trunk Railway to Lake Superior and thence by way of rivers and lakes and branch roads to Puget Sound. The difficulty with this plan lies in the climate. For six months in the year the route would not be useful. Accordingly, British enterprise will probably be compelled reluctantly to abandon the project of a British railroad. If Sir Morton Peto and his friends have much money to spend let them go to work and do for British America, and indeed for the British Empire, what its own engineers have failed to do."

The proper line for the road as the Tribune remarks a little further on, is not so far north as the route proposed through British America, but lies through Minnesota, Montana and Idaho. It is suggested that this line have its eastern terminus at an eligible point on the western shore of Lake Superior, and that it follow the route already explored and partially surveyed through the mountain passes to Puget Sound. From Lake Superior to Puget Sound the distance is computed at 1 113 miles. By the central route from Chicago to San Francisco, that line will be 1 733 miles in length. Here is a considerable difference in favor of the northern route. Should the navigable waters of the Columbia be made use of, and the road be built from Lake Superior to a point within easy reach on that river the difference in favor of the Northern route would appear still more considerable.

The observations of science as well as experimental proofs, show that no more snow falls on this northern route than on the one which lies much further to the South. Indeed there would be no more obstruction from snow on this line than is encountered in our Northern States.

By a computation which we have seen, it is made to appear that if this northern road were built, it would be possible to reach the shores of China and Japan in twenty five days from New York. Could this be done, it would effect a wonderful change in commerce, and would produce results of incalculable value for these western shores.

The gold mines of Montana in extent and richness, bid fair to surpass all others known. This fact may have much to do with determining the location of the first railroad to the Pacific. The Columbia river region contains the money to build the road, and the business of that country will soon demand that the great work be done.

The Basis of Representation.

A proposition has lately been made and sustained with much force by many journals at the East, to amend the national Constitution so as to make the voters of the several States the basis of Congressional representation. In support of this measure an argument of great weight is derived from the consideration that as the negroes of the South are now free, that section will have a largely increased representation in Congress, based upon an enumeration which will include the whole colored population; and that as this greatly augmented political power will be in the hands of one class only, much injustice will thereby be done to the people of the North. Putting the statement in its simplest form, citizens of Alabama or South Carolina will have, under the present order of things, two votes, where those of Massachusetts or Oregon will have but one. A little attention to the reports of the last census, will elucidate this matter.

The population of the two States of Alabama and South Carolina in 1860—white and colored—was as follows

	White	Colored	Total
Alabama,	526,431	437,770	964,201
South Carolina	291,388	402,720	703,708
Total	817,819	840,000	1667,909

On the basis of representation for three-fifths of the slaves, Alabama had a representation for 262,662 persons other than her whites; in like manner South Carolina was then represented in Congress for 241,397 blacks. The white population of these two States elected representatives for themselves and for the 500,000 other persons who by the terms of our Constitution were to be counted in the apportionment. Thus they had four representatives in Congress for the class who were held as property. By the abolition of slavery the three fifths rule will no longer have application, and Alabama and South Carolina are to have a representation based on 840,000 colored persons instead of 500 000 as heretofore. The white population will elect representatives both for themselves and the blacks, and the two races being about equal in numbers, 817 819 persons in Alabama and South Carolina will choose as many members of Congress as the whole State of Massachusetts, though the latter has a white population double as great as that of the two former combined.

This is a strong argument in favor of the Amendment above alluded to. Should the Amendment ever be adopted, representation would be fixed on a just basis, and the people of the South relieved of the disgrace of voting in the stead of such degraded creatures as "niggers."

A vein of rock about eight inches wide containing great quantities of gold has been discovered at Owyhee at a distance of about one thousand feet from the celebrated "Poorman" lodge. The rock is richer than any yet found in that district. It is not known how extensive the vein is. The inference is strong that it is not a regular lodge but that it comes from larger lodes and was thrown into its present position by a slide from the mountain.

The Confederate Democrat is having an immensity of trouble in the matter of keeping the members of its party true to their faith. To hear its constant appeals and solemn warnings one would think the "Democracy" was about to go over to the support of President Johnson and that the Democrat, as the pastor of the flock, was the only member that had not become too completely demoralized to raise a voice against the general apostasy which is destroying its party.

CONSIDERATE.—The Idaho Statesman of a late date say

In the absence of more interesting matter we indulge our editor in a few lines this morning from Ruby City

STOCKS BY THE BILLION. The sale of gold and stocks made by New York city brokers during the year ending the 30th of June last exceeded $6,000,000,000, yielding a governmental revenue of $1,000,000.

A man named Frank Jones has been committed to jail at the Dalles on a charge of forgery. His bail is fixed at $1,000.

The New York Herald says that twenty-four States have ratified the amendment abolishing slavery.

The amount of legal tender notes now in circulation is said to be $678,126,126.

SEWARD ON THE PRESIDENT. On the [illegible] of October Secretary Seward made a speech [illegible] friends at home, Auburn, New York. [illegible] speech [illegible] by that [illegible] marking of his oratorical efforts. We extract the following in reference to the President—the man and his position.

Some [illegible] seem to have been slightly disturbed by professions or demonstrations of favor toward the President made by parties who have [illegible] the Administration, as well as [illegible] [Laughter.] [illegible] well I had aside partisanship at Chicago in 1861 when the salvation [illegible] that sacrifice. It is not [illegible] descend to mere partisanship [illegible] Andrew Johnson had aside I am sure whatever of partisanship he had at the same time. [Applause.] That noble act did not all who [illegible] but on the other hand it forbade collusion by the friends of the Union with opponents of the [illegible] of the war and with reconciliation [illegible] the Government has found it necessary to pursue. Duty requires absolute and uncompromising fidelity to the [illegible] of those policies whosoever and of whatsoever party they may be. Andrew Johnson has practiced that fidelity against the violence of enemies to the sacrifice of his fortune, the hazard of his liberty and even the peril of his life. [Enthusiastic cheering.] The same fidelity is still identified with the success of those [illegible] and of course, is necessary to the achievement of their magnificent ends. [Loud applause.] Why should he now abandon those policies and desert time honored and tried supporters, merely because the dawning success of our efforts has compelled former opponents to approve and accept them. Patriotism and loyalty equally however require that fidelity in this case shall be mutual. Be ye faithful therefore, on your part and although the security I offer is unnecessary and an [illegible] yet I will guarantee fidelity on his part. Those who hitherto opposed the President, but now profess to support him, either are sincere or they are insincere. [Cheers.] Time must prove which is the fact. If they are sincere who that has a loyal heart must rejoice in their late though long delayed conversion? If they are insincere are we either less sagacious or have we less ability now than heretofore to counteract treachery to the national cause? Perhaps you fear the integrity of the man. I confess with a full sense of my accountability, that among all the public men whom I have met or with whom I have been associated or concerned, in this country [illegible] no one has seemed to me to be more wholly free from personal caprice and selfish ambition than Andrew Johnson, none to be more purely and exclusively moved in public action by love of country and good will to mankind.

The very first blow aimed by the "reconstructed" Democratic leaders is at the widows and orphans of the soldiers who have saved the nation. Hear their wicked purpose as avowed by ex-Senator Richardson, at Quincy, Illinois:

"But it is said there is an agreement that the bonds issued shall not be taxed, a solemn covenant that this thing shall not be done. The Constitution of the United States was and is a fundamental law, and the one law which is inviolable; yet these people who made this bond contract and [illegible] gave them power to disregard that sacred instrument. There is now an overruling necessity that we should tax these bonds, we want the money and must have it. But I deny the power of our Congress, by any assumption it may make, to limit the power of a subsequent Congress in reference to taxation. The only limitation there is upon Congress is the Federal Constitution. A Congress two or four years hence can amend, change or repeal a law passed by any prior Congress, and all limitation as sought to be imposed by the last Congress are no more binding than a last year's [illegible]. But it is said that we should not tax these bonds because they are in the hands of the widows and orphans of the soldiers. The widows and orphans who hold those bonds are the First, Second, Third and Fourth National Banks. I suppose according to this logic, I am a widow and orphan too, for I have a few of these bonds."

The Copperheads are capable of very mean things and this purpose of theirs as avowed by their spokesman, is the sublimation of all that is base, ungrateful and detestable. The people stand between the widows and orphans of our dead soldiers and the conscienceless ingrates who deliberately propose to plunder and starve them.

MONTANA.—We find the following in the Montana Post of the 4th November:

A new gulch, called "One Eye"—in honor of one of the discoverers—has been discovered recently, about 60 miles northwest of McClellan Gulch somewhere in the vicinity of the Jocko Mission. A gentleman who has just returned from there, says it is a long gulch and from the indications already obtained, promises to be one of the richest gulches in the country.

The body of a man named [illegible] Wall was found last week, near Canyon Ferry. He had crossed the ferry, on his way to Cave Gulch and was intoxicated at the time. His horse was seen a short time afterwards with the saddle and bridle on, whereupon search was made for the rider, who was found on the river bank, with his head in the water, dead.

Those who think the palmy days of Alder Gulch are numbered with the past, are most decidedly mistaken. The amount of gold still taken there from is immense, and, in instances, the yield of claims is enormous. Last Wednesday we were shown the result of one day's run, with five men which was just ninety six ounces. The claim from which this was taken is not far from town.

Large lots of goods arrived during the week, for different parties here. At all hours during the day for the last week, pack trains might have been seen defiling through the streets loaded with goods from the "other side." By far the largest amount of the recently arrived goods, came from the Missouri river where they were scattered at the various intervals last spring, some two or three trains having arrived within a few days.

Those who have consulted our commercial column the last three weeks have observed that flour is steadily advancing in price. Parties cannot lay in their winter supplies too soon. The experience of preceding winters should be profited by. As yet, the quotations are reasonable, but there is no telling how high they may reach before spring.

MAXIMILIAN LEGALIZING SLAVERY.—A late order of this usurper holds out inducements to "emigrants" to introduce other persons, whom he calls laborers, and establishes for them a condition of passage or serfdom. The New York Evening Post thus speaks of this movement:

Under cover of a pretended love of liberty this order of Napoleon's agent introduces a system of slavery in Mexico, and in connection with it holds out inducements for the introduction on this continent of great numbers of Africans, Chinese, Malays, etc. This has long been a favorite project of the French Emperor, but it is not conducive to the welfare of the United States or of the people of North America. We do not want to see this continent overrun by barbarous Africans and Asiatics.

Maximilian is becoming an unbearable nuisance. He will have to be abated in the general interest of the whole continent. Not content with imposing himself upon Mexico by French bayonets, not satisfied with bringing an army of European vagabonds and soldiers of fortune to defend him in his usurped seat, he now aims to make Mexico a place of deposit for the rubbish of all nations and races—a gathering place for hordes of ignorant and vicious barbarians. It is high time that our Government gave him and his master warning to get out of Mexico.

A California paper says, that the Post Offices at Skookum Chuck and Sanders' Prairie (Grand Prairie?) W T are ordered discontinued. All mail matter intended for the former office will be sent to Grand Mound; that intended for the latter [illegible]. We are unable to say whether the [illegible] or not, as we have [illegible] any other source about the matter.

The Statesman's proposition to "reconstruct" the Union party by excluding the Radicals is [illegible] faithful members, is like the [illegible] of restoring the Union by leaving New England out in the cold. We guess the Statesman must have the idea of a "new party" from that "most conservative" Horatio Seymour.

The last statement relative to Sterling Price informs us that Maximilian has appointed him agent to examine lands in Mexico for colonization purposes. So the "distinguished Missourian" has not gone to Brazil.

The largest gold nugget yet found in the northern country, was picked up not long since in the Blackfoot mines. Its value is about four thousand dollars.

THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY. [illegible] "The Man Without a Country." It was [illegible] of the [illegible] Edward Everett and was in the Atlantic Monthly in 186[illegible]. It narrates [illegible] of Philip Nolan, who in the [illegible] present century was an officer [illegible] was implicated by Aaron Burr [illegible] Mexican scheme, [illegible] when reminded of his allegiance [illegible] States exclaimed "[illegible] the United States! I wish I may never hear of the United States again!" For this he was court martialed and [illegible] sentenced [illegible] was carried out by [illegible] officer by whom he was placed [illegible] on a foreign station and kept at sea [illegible] till he died never permitted to [illegible] his native land nor to hear [illegible] This was told in a most admirable [illegible] to be a narrative of actual fact. The story excited a great sensation at the time and people were in doubt whether to regard it as truth [illegible] is now in the [illegible] called Atlantic Tales, [illegible] the best stories that have [illegible] Atlantic. "The Man Without a Country" is included in the volume and to it [illegible] an explanatory note. He says the story was written with the purpose of strengthening the love of country at [illegible] of the time of [illegible] treasonable conduct [illegible] that Philip Nolan [illegible] his knowledge [illegible] existence. He has received letters [illegible] from several parts of the country [illegible] affair. One old gentleman in this [illegible] the Nolan court martial, a lady [illegible] Nolan's sisters are now living [illegible] gentleman writes that Philip Nolan [illegible] sea, but was killed in Texas [illegible] number have been made at the Navy Department [illegible] Nolan and whether he was kept at sea as stated in the story. The general answer was that an officer was kept at sea, but his name was not Nolan. In view of the fact that the entire story is the product of the imagination these statements are sufficiently amusing. The story is certainly unsurpassed in ingenuity. H [illegible]

PLANTERS AND FREEDMEN.—A [illegible] correspondent relates some interesting anecdotes in regard to the petty disturbances between planters and freedmen. He says

I sat yesterday morning in the office of the Captain in charge of the contract business for an hour. There came in, finally, with a score of others, a planter living in this district, but some sixteen miles from town. He told me of an assault upon himself by one of his "niggers"—a boy who I brought up—and who's [illegible] a good home down [illegible] my place. While the boy was coming in from the street the man turned to me and explained: "It never don't do no good to show favor to a nigger for they's the most ungratefullest creturs in the world." The dreadful assault consisted in throwing a hatchet at the white man by one of the crowd of negroes who were having some dispute among themselves and suddenly turned in the early evening somebody swore along by the fence. The boy said it wasn't a hatchet, but a bit of brick, and added that the man was so far away that no one could tell whether he was white or black and that he didn't throw the brick till after he called out and told the man to go away. I fell with the negro out after he had received the [illegible] from the officer, and had some talk with him. "D—n him," said he referring to his employer "he never done nuffin ill his [illegible] but beat me an' kick me an' knock me down, an' I hopes I get shet with him some day."

THE FREEDMEN AND THE BUREAU.—The Superintendent of the Freedmen's Affairs in Louisiana, in making up his last annual report says he has had [illegible] He has settled temporarily on 9,650 acres of land who last year raised crops to the value of $175,000, and that he had but few worthless blacks on his care—adding

"I find that the colored people are not apt to be vagrants. They have fewer vagrants than can be found among any other class of persons and by far the fewest beggars. The class usually called 'vagrants' by the police and the courts are industrious and self supporting."

When the last rebel army surrendered he sent assistants up Red River to collect and provide for the blacks, so suddenly freed. At every place the blacks promptly went to work and soon ceased altogether to draw Government rations. The Assistant at Shreveport soon (July 24) wrote as follows

"There is a great demand for labor now, and there are no idle freedmen about the city. Not a ration has been drawn for any freedman here, except for the sick and attendants at the hospital."

Such is the operation of the Freedmen's Bureau, such the reason for the fiendish hate wherewith it is regarded by every Copperhead and impenitent rebel in the land. This detest and seek its abolition because it stands between the freedmen and their anxiety to reenslave them to virtual if not to legal slavery. But they have not yet triumphed.—N. Y. Tribune.

"THE "FINE OLD ARKANSAW GENTLEMAN."— A few months since, Albert Pike the Arkansas poet and lawyer was raising Indians to fight against the lawfully constituted authorities of the United States and inciting his own fellow citizens to the slaughter of their countrymen by poetry all the more dangerous because exquisitely written. The war ended, Albert "came down out of the tree," like Captain Scott's coon, and we see his repentance has been so sincere that on the 9th ultimo he was presented by the Masonic Lyceum of New York with "the decoration of honor of a Thirty third degree Mason" in token of the services rendered by him to Masonry. He made a loyal speech, and heartily joined in the cheer with which the toast to the President of the United States was greeted and gave in conclusion, as a sentiment, "The Army, officers and soldiers of the United States in the late war." The World still calls him General Pike.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.—The latest development of Fenianism is a summons against Sir Robert Peel Chief Secretary for Ireland on a charge of provoking a breach of the peace. Sir Robert was traveling on the Queenstown railway with a Dublin "ex banker," whom unfortunately the fellow travelers fell out by the way and Sir Robert at all times excitable did so says the "ex banker," threaten him and abuse him that the "ex banker" was compelled to take out a summons against the Secretary. In a former quarrel it will be remembered that the O'Donoghue challenged Sir Robert and that Sir Robert would have fought had not Lord Palmerston interposed. On the present occasion Lord Palmerston's agent was a witness to the altercation, and has been summoned to give evidence.

NOT PARTICULAR.—The editor of the Carson Appeal closes a very good article on negro equality as follows

Why there are as many as three nigger newspapers in California. Are we in danger of disreputable contamination with Africans because colored men are the editors of those sheets? We guess not. If we are we can stand it. And just by way of giving an out and out respectability to all who are engaged in [illegible] we should like to see a nigger [illegible] vote. [illegible] of these days we may need their ballots to help us sustain the liberty of the press.

TEXAS.—The Texas papers estimate that there will be not more than half a crop [illegible] in that State this year. The army [illegible] heavy rains that have prevailed there have greatly diminished the yield there would otherwise have been. There will be considerable cotton raised in Illinois this year. The crop along the line of the Illinois Central Railroad is estimated at 2,000 bales against 1,000 bales last year and in the southern part of the State there are hundreds of acres that are waiting for pickers. There are not white laborers enough to gather the crop and the inhabitants of "Egypt" are not yet sufficiently liberalized to allow negroes to work with them.

A great stir among the [illegible] at Nashville has been caused by a bill providing for an immigration [illegible] and bureau, which has been proposed in the Senate by the Hon. Mr. Frazer. The bill provides for a bureau at Nashville, with the Governor as head, creates agencies at New York and at several of the principal places of Germany, and provides an appropriation for the purpose of purchasing suitable buildings in the first cities of the State to be used [illegible] emigrants [illegible] after the fashion of [illegible] in New York.

A splendid regiment of [illegible] the Eleventh United States [illegible] men, marched up Broadway, New York, on the 17th October with a pomp and circumstance that attracted immense crowds and hearty greetings. Every man was fully equipped and wore white gloves.

General Phil Sheridan who was born in the county of Cavan, Ireland, is [illegible] the Grand Centre of the Fenian Brotherhood. Sheridan has been incorrectly reported a native of Perry county Ohio.

IMMIGRATION TO THE SOUTH.—Governor Andrew of Massachusetts is turning his attention to a gigantic scheme of helping populate the south anew, to be done by encouraging Northern emigration.

TENNYSON.—The poet Tennyson is thus described by one who saw him recently:

"He was dressed in a very ordinary, rather negligent manner, but his thick curly gray hair hung in long shaggy locks down over a broad collar. His hat was drawn over his face so that I could not see his phrenological development, but he truly had the sad, passive eye, which I have heard credited to him, and which, withal, was nervous and downcast. He wore a rather long beard and mustache both were plentifully sprinkled with white though, originally very dark. The poet's complexion was sallow his nose straight and his face rather long."

"BEAST BUTLER" [illegible] An English paper of recent date says: "The Rev. Mr. Hill and other magistrates of Stowmarket, [illegible] have committed a woman seventy years of age to prison for fourteen days, with hard labor, for picking a handful of corn worth 2d. Why do not the English and secession press howl about this?"

No fewer than 101,000 persons had left Marseilles up to the 29th of September on account of the cholera. This is more than three sevenths of the population. At Arles where there were only 5,000 inhabitants out of 25 000 left on the 30th, there were on that day twenty three deaths from cholera.

A Boston correspondent of the Rochester (New York) Democrat writes thus about the tomb of Daniel Webster at Marshfield: "When the son of Fletcher Webster was buried the other day his grandfather's coffin was again opened and his remains found in perfect preservation. There is a secret about it but those features will never be seen again."

The Pacific Railroad.

[Correspondence of the Springfield Republican.]

SAN FRANCISCO, August 21, 1865. To feel the importance of the Pacific Railroad, to measure the urgency of its early completion, to become impatient with Government and contractor at every delay in the work, you must come across the plains and the mountains to the Pacific coast. Then you will see half a continent waiting for its vivifying influences. You will witness a boundless agriculture, fickle and hesitating for lack of the regular markets this would give. You will find mineral wealth innumerable locked up, wastefully worked or gambled away, until this shall open to it abundant labor, cheap capital and water, economy, ready oversight and all the products in everything that shall make mining a certainty and not a chance. You will find the world's commerce with India and China only awaiting its opportunities. You will see an illimitable field for manufactures, unimproved for want of its stimulus and its advantages. You will feel heart-breaking, see mortals struggling slowly upward against odds, know that religion languishes, feel, see and know that all the sweetest and finest influences and elements of society and Christian civilization hunger and suffer for the lack of this quick contact with the parent and fountain of all our national life.

It is touching to remember that between Plains and Pacific, in country and coast, in the [illegible] on the Colorado, through all our long journey, the first question asked of us by every man and woman we have met—whether they be rich or poor, high or humble—has been, "When do you think the Pacific Railroad will be done?" "Why don't or won't the Government, now the war is over, put the soldiers to building this?"—and their parting appeal and injunction as well, "Do build the Pacific road for us as soon as possible; we wait, everything waits for that." Tender-eyed women, hard-fisted men—pioneers, missionaries, the martyrs and the successful—all alike feel and speak this sentiment. It is the hunger, the prayer, the hope of all these people. Hunger, and prayer, and hope for home and what home can bring them, in cheap and ready passage to and from, of re-union with parent, and brother and sister and friend, of sight of old valley, and mountain, and wood, of social influence, of æsthetic elevation, of worldly stimulus and prosperity. "Home," they all here call the East. It is a touching and pathetic, though almost unconscious tribute. Such an one "is going home next spring." "I hope to go home another year." "When I was home last." "I have never been home since I came out." "I am afraid I shall never go home again"—these and kindred phrases are the current forms of speech. Home is not here, but there. The thought of home is ever rolled, like a sweet morsel, under the tongues of their souls. Here be large appeals both to the sympathy and foresight of the Eastern States. Here be present bond of union and means for perpetuating it. To build the railroad, and freshen recollection and renew association of the original emigrants, and to bind by travel and contact the children here with the homes and lives and loves of their parents there; this is the cheapest, surest and sweetest way to preserve our nationality and continue the republic a unit from ocean to ocean. A sad and severe trial will ensue to the Union if a generation grows up here that "knows not Joseph." The centrifugal forces will ever be in hot action between the far-separated Eastern and Western sections of the nation. First among the centripetal powers is the Pacific Railroad, and every year of its delay increases ten fold its burden, and weakens in equal degree the influences here by which it shall operate.

What is doing to supply this great want of Pacific progress and civilization and national unity? What are the possibilities and probabilities of the great continental railway? are what you will wish to know from me. Our journey has lain along its most natural commercial route; we started from its eastern terminus on the Missouri border, we kept in the main line of population and travel, which it is desirable for it to follow; we finished our ride upon its beginnings at this end, and we have everywhere had the subject forced upon our thought, and made it constant study. Many of the obstacles to the great work grow feeble in travel over its line. Want of timber, of water, of coal for fuel, the steep grades and high ascents of the two great continental ranges of mountains to be crossed, the Rocky and the Sierras, and the snows they will accumulate upon the track in the winter months—these are the suggested and apparent difficulties to the building and operating of the Pacific Railroad. There is plenty of good timber in the mountains, and the soft cottonwood of the Plains can be kyanized (hardened by a chemical process) so as to make sound sleepers and ties. There are sections of many miles, even perhaps of two hundred, over which the timber will have to be hauled, but the road itself can do this as it progresses—taking along over the track built to-day the timber and rails for that to be built to-morrow. As to water, artesian wells are sure to find it in the vacant desert stretches, which are neither so long nor so barren of possible water as has been supposed. The fuel question is perhaps more difficult to solve as yet. The Sierras will furnish wood in abundance, and cheaply, for all the Western end. We know there is coal in the Rocky Mountains, and we were told almost everywhere over the entire line that it had been or could undoubtedly be found in Kansas, on the Plains, among the hills of the deserts. But suppose the supplies of food for steam have to be carried over a few hundred miles of the road, east and west from the Sierras and the Rocky Mountains; that is not so hard a matter—certainly nothing to daunt or hesitate the enterprise. We shall soon learn, too, to make steam from petroleum; and that is easily transported for long distances; besides which, prospectors are finding it everywhere from Missouri to the Pacific. Build the road, and the intermediate country will speedily find the means for running it.

Now, as to difficulties of construction, heavy grades and high mountains, and the winter snows as obstacles to continuous use.

The first third of the line, from the Missouri river to the Rocky Mountains is mere baby work. Three hundred men will grade it as fast as the iron can be laid. It is a level, natural roadway with very little bridging, and no want of water. It is a shame all this section is not finished and running already. The first of January, 1867, ought now to be the limit for its completion. From here to Salt Lake over the Rocky Mountains, there are apparently no greater obstacles to be overcome than your Western road from Springfield to Albany, the Erie and the Pennsylvania Central have triumphed and profitably surmounted. There are various contesting routes: northerly by the North Platte and the South Pass; by the South Platte and Bridger's Pass, which is the route we traveled on the stage; or more direct still from Denver through the present gold mining region of Colorado by Clear creek and over the Berthoud Pass, or again by a kindred route to the last up Bowlder creek and over Bowlder Pass, both these two entering the "Middle Park" of the mountains and through that to the head waters of the Salt Lake Basin. The Berthoud and Bowlder Pass routes would probably involve higher grades and more rock cutting, and in Winter deeper snows, but they would [illegible] the uglier rougher country, avoiding the deserts of the north, and save at least one hundred miles of distance. A new road for the Overland stages is this very season being cut through the Bowlder creek route by the help of the United States soldiers from Utah, and the stage line is expected to be transferred to it this Fall or next Spring. But by the Bridger or South Pass routes the railroad can surmount the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains with the greatest ease. Our stage teams trotted up the hardly perceptible grades by the Bridger route without any effort. Coming down into Salt Lake Valley, there would be rougher work, but there are several considerable streams along whose banks the track could be brought down, sure with no greater labor or expense than has been incurred in a dozen cases by our Eastern railroads.

From Salt Lake to the Sierra Nevadas are two routes: southerly through the center of Nevada and striking Austin and Virginia City, the centres of the silver mining region, which is the present stage and telegraph route—and northerly by the Humboldt river. The former would pass more directly through the centres of present and prospective population; but it would encounter a dozen or fifteen ranges of hills to be crossed, and find little wood and scant water. The Humboldt route would be more cheaply built and go through a naturally better country as to wood, water and fertility of soil. It is generally conceded to be the true natural roadway across the continent. The emigration has always taken it. If the railroad is built through it, Virginia City and Austin will be reached by branches dipping down to them through their neighboring valleys.

Now we reach the California border and the toughest part of the work of the railroad—the high reaching, far-spreading, rock-fastened and snow-covered Sierra Nevadas. But the difficulties here are mitigated by plenty of water and timber, and by the near presence of an energetic population, and are already being practically overcome by the energy and perseverance of the California Pacific railroad organization. I only wish the East would get to Salt Lake with their rail as soon as the West can or will with theirs. It is not gratifying to Eastern pride indeed to see how much more California, with its scant capital, its scarce labor, and its depressed industry and interests, is doing to solve this great practical problem of the continental railway than your abounding wealth and teeming population of the East, with a great network of railroads from the Atlantic all reaching and pretending to look an outlet west to the Pacific coast. Let me state the condition of the work on each end of the line.

Congress has given generous bounties to the enterprise, all that could be expected; everything that was asked. Government bonds are loaned it to the amount of $16,000 a mile through the plains, and $48,000 a mile in the mountains. Besides which, half of all the land each side of the road for twenty miles deep is donated outright to the companies doing the work. The Union Pacific Railroad Company is recognized at the East, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company here, as entitled to this bounty, and are respectively authorized to construct the roads from their starting points until they meet. The companies are further authorized to issue their own bonds to an equal amount to those granted by the Government, and secure them by a first mortgage, the Government loan taking the second place in security.

The business of supplying the populations of Colorado, Utah and Montana, at least 100,000 persons, invites the speedy construction of the road from the East. This business for 1864 is estimated at forty million pounds, and for 1865 at two hundred millions, and employed last year 9,000 wagons, 30,000 cattle, 10,000 horses and mules and 10,000 men as drivers, laborers and guards; and the sum paid for freight in the former year is estimated at enough to build the railroad the entire distance at a cost of $10,000 to the mile. And during the months of May and June, this year, counting both the emigration and the freight trains, there passed west over the Plains full 10,000 teams and 50,000 to 60,000 head of stock, according to data furnished from Fort Laramie and the junction of the overland routes on the Platte river. The shipment of supplies for the United States troops on the Plains and in the mountains this season alone is over eleven million pounds. All these statistics may not be perfectly accurate, but they have a substantial basis of fact; and with such generous gifts as the Government makes and with such large railway interests behind to be benefitted by further extension of lines to the west, they would seem to justify and to demand a rapid construction of the road out from the Missouri river, especially when for the first five hundred to six hundred miles of that road there is scarcely more required than to scrape a place in the soft soil for sleepers and ties and iron. And yet, though three to four years have passed since the company accepted the bargain of the Government and assumed its responsibilities, not a mile of the road is running from the Missouri west. The lower branch from Kansas City is open to Lawrence, forty miles, and graded to Topeka, sixty miles; but from Atchison and Omaha there is no iron down, and only small sections graded or half graded. It is said that by the Government flooding the market with the better classes of its securities, there was no sale for the bonds allotted for this work, and so no means for its construction; the reply is, that no set of men should step forward to accept this largess and undertake this enterprise, building such sure profits to the future, that have not at least a million or two of their own to make a beginning with. Has the war absorbed all labor and capital during these years? Other roads have been built meantime, and labor was cheaper on the Plains than in California. Besides, here are six months since the war ended and the end witnesses no marked progress, no larger activity than the beginning.

I know nothing of the men who form the Pacific Railroad Company of the East. I suspect their names are more familiar to Wall street than to the West or the railroad world; but I do know that all I could see or hear of them and their work along the route of the continental railway, did not indicate either the earnestness or the power that should accompany their position, their responsibilities and the opportunities. After leaving the Missouri river, indeed, they offered no sign of life except in a single small party of engineers in Salt Lake City, who were on a straggling hunt for the best route through the Rocky Mountains, but who seemed to have no proper leadership and no clear purpose, and, in fact, confessed that the company had no Chief Engineer worthy the name of the position.

Here in California, however, there is more life and progress. Energy and capital are not perhaps the best directed possible; there has been and still is somewhat of controversy and waste of power as to the true route, but there is earnestness and movement of the right sort, and the track is fast ascending the Sierras on its progress eastward. It has no immediate way business to tempt it but the trade of Nevada with 50,000 population—much less, therefore, than that which invites the laying of the rails across the prairies to the Rocky Mountains—but this has constructed and amply paid for two fine toll roads over the Sierras, and was, until a few days ago, building two railroads in their tracks. There being free water carriages from San Francisco to Sacramento, these rival roads have their base at the latter point, and branch off right and left into the mountains, and cross the summit of the latter some thirty or forty miles apart, coming together at a common point in Nevada on the other side, namely, Virginia City. The distance between Sacramento and Virginia City is about the same, 160 miles, by each road, and their rivalry has given excellent accommodations for travel and traffic, and helped to push forward the railroad tracks on both lines. The original and heretofore most popular road was that by Placerville and Lake Tahoe, over which we came into the State, as already described. The railway track is now laid about forty miles from Sacramento, or nearly to Placerville, which is among the foothills of the mountains. During the "flush" times of Nevada, 1862 and 1863, the business done over this road was immense. In the latter year about $12,000,000 were paid for freight alone, the cost of transportation being from five to ten cents a pound, and the tolls on teams received by the constructors of the wagon road, amounted to $640,000. The charge for a single team is about $30, and in 1864, when the business was much less than before, no less than seven thousand teams passed over this Placerville route, carrying all kinds of food and merchandise and machinery over into Nevada, but coming back nearly empty. As showing how great and wasteful was and still is the cost of doing business in Nevada under such circumstances, it has been carefully estimated that the famous Gould & Curry silver mine at Virginia City would have saved $2,000,000 in expenses in a single year had a railroad been built and running over the mountains. The production of the mine that year was $4,000,000, but the expenses absorbed $3,000,000, leaving only $1,000,000 of profit to stockholders, when over $3,000,000, probably, with ready and cheap communication with the San Francisco market [illegible]

The staging and freighting over these mountain roads are performed in the most perfect style, however. The freight wagons are bigger and stronger than anything ever seen in the East; generally a smaller one is attached behind, and the train is drawn by ten or twelve large and strong mules or horses [illegible] the usual [illegible] the [illegible] is made in the best season [illegible] they are [illegible] keep step [illegible] spirit [illegible] [illegible] for a quarter and half a mile, and the [illegible] is the only interruption [illegible] the grand [illegible] the [illegible] stage teams [illegible] generally loaded with passengers [illegible] half flying over the well graded mountain road [illegible] each way daily. The stage horses are sleek and [illegible] and [illegible] their work [illegible] The Placerville road is watered [illegible] the streets [illegible] Summer [illegible] of [illegible] keeping the road in good repair [illegible]

[illegible] running away with the [illegible] route [illegible] may more [illegible] the [illegible] snow [illegible] and the Government bounty [illegible] [illegible] track ahead of the [illegible] advantage [illegible] the [illegible] Indeed within a few days the friends have [illegible] interest in the railway [illegible] will probably [illegible] the construction of the latter beyond [illegible] Dutch Flat and Donner Lake [illegible] as well as the Pacific Railroad, and [illegible] the [illegible] was [illegible] by the late T. D. Judah, who has left a very enviable reputation in California both for personal integrity and professional ability as an engineer after a thorough examination of other routes and passes over the mountains—and having gained mainly by his endeavors the approval of Congress and the support of the city of San Francisco and Sacramento, at last readily achieved these decided advantages over its rival, which was also sustained by [illegible] capital [illegible] the [illegible] having established the general [illegible] of the Pacific Railroad [illegible] Congress [illegible] was an assistant engineer in the construction of your Connecticut River Railroad, and a brother of [illegible] His reputation is one of the main bulwarks of the friends of his road in the bitter controversy that has raged between them and the advocates of the [illegible] and though the contest now seems nearly or quite ended [illegible] of [illegible] intelligent citizens of the State still [illegible] the Placerville line is the easiest and safest for the railroad track. Our own superficial examination of the two routes lends this a [illegible] but it is too late now to argue the question. The Donner or Dutch Flat route has got the name and the means and is being pushed over the mountains with considerable vigor and rapidity, and it is wise for California and the country alike to push it, and secure its completion as early as possible.

Our party made a very profitable and interesting excursion over the route of the railroad from Sacramento to Donner Lake, on the east side of the mountains, by special train and coaches, and along the working sections on horseback. The road is graded and laid, and trains are running, to the new town of Colfax, named after the Speaker, which is fifty-six miles from Sacramento. Grading is now in active progress on the next two sections to Dutch Flat, twelve miles, and at the Crystal Lake, thirty miles further, with a force of some 4,000 men, [illegible] laborers, mostly Chinese. Though these sections are through a very rough and rocky country, they will probably be finished to Dutch Flat by Spring, and to Crystal Lake early next Fall. Then the railroad will be within [illegible] miles of the summit of the Sierras. The heavy work of the whole line lies in these fifteen miles up and the three or four miles down to Donner Lake, on the other side. This must be [illegible] two or three years of constant [illegible] probably, and much heavy [illegible] several tunnels at the summit, which is [illegible] feet above the sea level [illegible] to keep all the snows [illegible] for surveys, often the anticipated severity [illegible] work, and the company and its engineers are sanguine of mastering all the difficulties of the summit section in two years.

The wagon road goes down from the summit to Donner Lake at the rate of about 400 feet to the mile and the railway track will have to be wound in and out on the mountain sides for ten or more miles in order to get the thousand feet down to the level of the lake, whence it can be run readily down by the Truckee river into the valleys and plains of Nevada. The road ascends the mountains on this side by a very regular and uniform grade, never exceeding 105 feet to the mile, which is less than the highest grades of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, to which the Act of Congress limits its character. In going down the other side no grade will exceed 105 feet, and after reaching Donner Lake the grade will be reduced to forty feet. But the company does not propose to wait for the full construction of the track over the summit before pushing the work on the line beyond. While that is advanced as fast as possible they will commence next Spring at Donner Lake and proceed down the mountains and out into and through Nevada as rapidly as may be, eager to absorb as much of the whole enterprise and meet the road coming west at a point as far east as they can.

So far the company have used none of the United States bonds or lands granted by Congress in aid of the work. Some two and a half millions of these bonds are now due. The company can issue an equal amount of their own bonds, guaranteed by a preceding or first mortgage; but none of these, also, have yet been used. They also have available a million and a half of other bonds on which the State of California pays seven per cent interest in gold for twenty years. Here are six millions and a half of good securities now on hand for prosecuting the work, besides what is earned as the work progresses, and the power to anticipate the issue of their own first mortgage bonds, at the rate of $48,000 for a mile of mountain and $16,000 for a mile of plain, for one hundred miles in advance of construction. The work so far has been done out of about a million paid up stock and subscriptions of the county of Sacramento of $300,000, the county of Placer of $250,000, and of San Francisco of $400,000, and the profits of that part of the road in running order. Of these sums nearly half a million is still left, and as the road has gone so far as to substantially secure a monopoly of all the business over the mountains, the profits on its completed section will be continually increasing. Then besides all this, there are between eighteen and nineteen of the twenty millions capital stock of the road yet unsubscribed for. Sometime, though not at present, this will be paying property, and it may suffice even now for the profits of the contractors. The company thus feel strong financially, and though much of their securities are not just now marketable except at a discount, they are confident there need be no further delay for the lack of means, and are increasing their working force upon the road as fast as laborers can be had. All the Chinese that offer, or that can be encouraged to emigrate from home, are employed, and it is expected that five thousand will be at work on the road before the present season closes.

These details are very long, but I trust are not altogether tedious or uninteresting. The theme presses itself upon us more deeply, more solemnly than any one other offered by our journey and its observations. It is pathetic and painful, as I said in the beginning, in the solitude and anxiety it awakens here among the people and which we cannot help but share. There is really nothing unreasonable in demanding that rails should be laid and trains running over half the line between the Pacific Ocean and the Missouri river in two years and a half, over two thirds of it in another year, and the entire distance unbroken in five years. There are short sections in the mountains that may require three, or even five years to work them out, but the great bulk of the way can be graded and laid with rails in three years. The California Pacific Railroad Company, led by some of the best men in the State, with ex-Governor Stanford for President, say calmly and distinctly in their annual report just published that they will take their completed line into Salt Lake City in three years from date. I believe they can and will do it, with anything like an easy money and labor market. And it is just as practicable for the road from the East to reach the Rocky Mountains in twelve or eighteen months, and to span those mountains in two years more.

Next spring should see as many men at work on the eastern line as there will be on the western; the full fifteen or twenty thousand along its entire route. 1867 should count fifty thousand shovels and picks and drills leveling the paths for this national highway; and in 1869 the hungry hearts of these people of the Pacific States should [illegible] to the music of a hundred thousand strong [illegible] sweeter far and holier even than that of the martial bands of the new republic. Men of the East! Men of Washington! You have given the toil and even the blood of a million of your brothers and fellows for four years, and spent three thousand millions of treasure, to save the nation of the republic from barbarism and anarchy; and your triumph makes the cost cheap. Lend now a tithe of this toil of men and a hundred millions of money to create a new republic, to marry to the nation of the Atlantic an equal if not greater nation of the Pacific. Anticipate a new sectionalism, a new strife, by a triumph of the arts of peace that shall be even grander and more enduring than the victories of war. Here [illegible] of a [illegible] great debt [illegible] bounded [illegible] the commerce of the world, here the completion of republic [illegible] but you must come and take them all with the [illegible]
